Shopping Made Easy

When it's time to shop for lighting, the sheer volume of options and considerations can be overwhelming. Whether you are outfitting a new build or a single room, here's how to make showroom shopping a joy.

GO TO THE EXPERTS "Showrooms have incredible in-house design experts who can help you with your lighting plan," says Mollie Kitchens, content marketing manager of Capital Lighting Fixture Co. "Take advantage of that!"

SHARE WHAT YOU LIKE and what you don't. Here, photos are worth more than a thousand words. Instead of trying to describe lighting styles, bring photos.

BRING MEASUREMENTS Know the room's dimensions, including the ceiling height, as well as the height, width, and length of any furniture piece, such as a dining table or kitchen island, that a fixture will hang above.

KNOW THE NUMBERS Do you have a deadline for installation? Ask to see only what is available within your desired time frame. What's your price point? Knowing how much you are willing to spend can narrow your choices.

FIND FUNCTION "A showroom can help a customer understand their needs from a functional standpoint," says Greg Martin, creative director for Kichler. "Customers are looking for something to fit their overall look and budget, but what about functionality? Is this the only light in the room or is it jewelry? Do they need a task light?"

DESCRIBE ITS MATES Will your new fixture have helpers? Bring photos of all the lighting in the space and be ready to describe (or show with a video on your phone) how much light they offer.

SHOW YOUR SPACE Again, bring photos or design plans—not only of the room you are shopping for, but also of your whole house. Especially if the house has an open floor plan, include several rooms to show the relationship between spaces and a view of the rooms. Those visuals give insight into your personal style.

THE RIGHT TIME

Consultants tend to be busiest between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. If you want time to dig in, visit early. Make an appointment, especially if you're looking for a lot of fixtures for a new home or remodeling project. That ensures you have a dedicated pro focused on working with you.

When Should I Visit?

"You want to get to a showroom early in your decision-making process," says Heather Craine, CLC at Heather Craine Lighting Design in Kelowna, Canada. "Don't leave it to the very end. What's available and quick and easy may not be what you want. If you're doing a renovation, you'll want to make lighting decisions in tandem with your other design choices."

Socketed or Integrated Fixtures?

SOCKETED FIXTURES have been, well, fixtures for most of our lives. Enter the integrated fixture, which makes LED lighting part and parcel of the piece.

LEDs give designers the ability to create lighting that's sculptural, geometric, totally free-form. Integrated LED fixtures are showing up in every room, including outdoor rooms.

While an LED lasts a lot longer than an old-fashioned incandescent bulb, some can't get their heads around the idea that if the light itself dies, they'd have to throw out the entire fixture. "But they are fixable in the field," says Greg Martin, creative director at Kichler. "The driver can be replaced. And, they will be more update-able as the tech gets better."

BEYOND BASICS

The right lighting is more than a fixture. Use these tips to take full advantage of showroom expertise.

BULB GUIDANCE Showrooms offer bulb buyers a personalized experience, says Eric Choi, senior director at Bulbrite. "A showroom should have a curated selection of bulbs on display that better fit a consumer's home decor needs," he says.

INSTALLATION Customers shouldn't feel fixture installation is a DIY job. Get a certified electrician to install fixtures. Local ALA-member showrooms can offer recommendations.

MAINTENANCE Local showrooms also offer instruction on how to dust and clean a fixture. They remind customers to keep extra bulbs on hand. They go the extra mile when it comes to service.

INSIGHTS AND IDEAS TO INSPIRE AND INFORM

THE latest IN lighting

It's time to stop thinking of lighting as the jewelry of the room and start thinking of it as the head-turning gown.

Fashion forward

DESIGNERS are choosing lighting near the beginning of the interiors planning process—even before the furnishings, upholstery, and wallcoverings—as a room's showpiece.

Whether the fixture acts as the room's centerpiece or is more in keeping with the overall room style and recedes, its light output can bring visual tension.

EXPERT ADVICE
Consider how the fixture illuminates a space. Does the fixture give direct light? Bounce light off the ceiling? Cast a pattern through glass or a shade?

"It all adds visual drama," says Greg Martin, creative director for Kichler.

Top 10 Trends to Watch

1 BRASS & BLACK This winning combination continues to dominate. While farmhouse and industrial styles are still popular, warmer blacks with heritage or vintage-look brass bring a new twist. Carlysle, Savoy House

2 WARM FINISHES Whites, warm grays, and blonde wood—hugely influential in paint and furniture colors—are making their way into lighting. Gadsen, Quoizel

3 NATURALS Woven grasses (think rattan and seagrass), stone (like alabaster), rough-cut crystals, and even highly reactive ceramic glazes continue to be style front-runners. Sariel, Canarm

4 SUSTAINABILITY While fixtures crafted with organic materials are a long-running trend, sustainable lighting choices, such as LED and low-voltage options, are quickly catching up. Shoppers are choosing fixtures with sustainable looks and sustainable components. Maura, Currey & Company

5 SCALE Statement fixtures act as sculpture in a room. Fixtures are bigger but not imposing. They take up space but don't inhibit site lines. Luna, Crystorama Lighting

6 NOSTALGIA A longing for the past and simpler, if idealized, times is a natural response to a few years of pandemic, unrest, and a possible global recession. Classic silhouettes from influential design periods—from old world to midcentury—and new interpretations will emerge. Logan, House of Troy

7 ALL THINGS GOLDEN Gold tones continue to grow as silver finishes recede. Muted golds and matte finishes that appear soft to the touch are on the rise. Stu, Lark by Hinkley

8 CUSTOMIZATION Today's lighting customers make it their own with mix-and-match options for shades or configurations. They want the ability to make lighting adapt to a room's function—especially when that room needs to pivot from kitchen to office to workout studio. Serif, Kuzco Lighting

9 OUTDOOR Alfresco rooms were all the rage during the pandemic. That trend, and lighting to make outdoor living comfortable, is staying strong. Cove, Access Lighting

10 SCONCES Bedside, flanking open shelving, lined up in the hallway, even hung between mirrors in a bathroom—sconces, whether hardwired or pin-up, are everywhere. Dawn, Maxim Lighting

Lighting for better sleep

CIRCADIAN RHYTHMS refer to aspects of humans' physical, mental, and behavioral well-being that respond to the natural world.

In quality of sleep, we most readily see the effects of light-disrupted circadian rhythm. We live our daily lives using artificial light from lamps and electronic screens.

The natural light in a bright blue sky, for instance, can be as bright as 10,000K, which suppresses melatonin and can help you to be more alert and responsive. That is why scientists recommend not using a digital device powered by blue light before going to bed.

Work with a lighting professional to organize your home lighting to give bright light in the morning and low-level light in the evening. For convenience, you can connect dimmers to timers, many of which can be controlled by an app. Dimming and warming the color temperature of your lights can help you power down before bed.

1 | In the bedroom, the ability to control light levels and color temperature matter for good rest. Caseta Diva, Lutron Electronics

TECH TIP The Better Light, Better Sleep program from the American Lighting Association encourages manufacturers to include circadian lighting in new residential fixture designs. "The light fixtures we use for homes don't provide enough lumens to establish circadian rhythm," says Terry McGowan, FIES, LC, director of engineering and technology for ALA. The program works with manufacturers to develop fixtures that provide the right light at the right time.

TRENDING GLASS

The soft glow from white glass creates less glare. Less glare means everyone using the room will see better. While LED bulbs have become much more stylish and attractive, white or patterned glass can disguise a bulb if needed.

CLEANING TIP
"If you want a clear glass fixture, find one that's totally sealed so dust doesn't get into it," says Bob Warmbold, CLC, Accent Lighting, Redmond, Oregon. "At the showroom we use a feather duster on a regular basis and a diluted Windex-type product on a damp rag to wipe down the glass inside and out."

What's My Home Missing?

WHEN IT COMES to lighting, homeowners don't know what they don't know. One thing is certain: A home should offer the best fit possible for that family's lifestyle. Lighting plays a big role.

"Break it down room by room," says Pam Bailey of Currey & Company. "You live differently in each room. Think about: How do I use this space? Where do I need light?"

In the bedroom, for example, you want easy-to-reach bedside lights. "But in my own bedroom, I need an overhead fixture and a lamp on the dresser," she says. "I travel often, and I need light for packing my suitcases."

LIGHTING FOR AGING EYES

With each passing year of life, it becomes more difficult for people to make out small details, see the difference between light and dark surfaces, and discriminate color. Aging also makes everyone more sensitive to glare. Brighter and more consistent lighting is increasingly important as you age.

The ALA offers these tips:

- Employ indirect lighting to soften shadows and make a room's lighting uniform.
- Use diffusing shades to reduce glare.
- Use adjustable task lights to direct light where you need it.
- Illuminate hazards with low-level stair, entry, and hallway lights.
- Consider automatic motion sensor lighting for way-finding at night.

KITCHENS
Cook.Eat.Work.Live.

Life happens every hour of every day in your kitchen. You live by its lighting, no matter what's happening in the space—from bright task lighting for preparing meals and doing work or crafts to soft, barely-there lights for not-yet-awake, early-morning coffee-making and late-night freezer raids to satisfy ice cream cravings. With the right layers of lighting, your kitchen can be the perfectly lit setting for every moment of your life.

Think in Multiples

“PENDANTS allow you to set the design tone for the room,” Tim Stumm, Z-Lite creative director, says. Over an island, “you might do three pendants, each with a 6-inch puddle of light, or five smaller pendants, each with a 2-inch circle of light.”

Even if you have a single junction box in the ceiling, “don’t limit yourself by thinking you can only hang one pendant,” he says. “You can install a canopy that allows many pendants on that single box.”

LOOK TO TRENDS

From Stumm’s observation, modern farmhouse style “is waning a bit, but contemporary styles in black finishes are all the rage right now,” he says. Transitional in style, they can lean traditional or modern, and mesh well with just about everything. “You can change your style: Start with farmhouse and then pull the shiplap out, and go more contemporary,” Stumm says. “The black fixtures still work.”

DESIGNER TIPS

While multiple pendants are a design must-have, “there’s nothing worse than building a wall with lighting,” Stumm says. Visually heavy or solid pendants might do just that if they stop you from seeing the other side of the island. “Consider a less dense or clear fixture because you want the eye to travel through it. It’s there but not there: You can see beyond it.”

LIGHT BEYOND THE WIRING

“One big mistake: feeling hamstrung by the electrical layout, especially when there’s only wiring for one overhead light,” Stumm says. “I like to ask questions: Where do you make coffee? Where do you prep? Tell me the work zones, and I’ll light those areas.” There are many options that don’t require hardwiring, including rechargeable lights. “We can now put lighting where there is no electricity,” he says. “There are solutions for these dark corners!”

Leverage Layers

"IN A KITCHEN, you really do need three layers of light," Tim Stumm says. "Ambient is the ceiling light that illuminates the whole room; task is pendants over the island and undercabinet/counter lighting to shine on the area where you're chopping or peeling; and accent lighting."

Accent lighting spotlights special features, such as artwork or open shelves, and brightens dark spots, such as a toe-kick along a lower cabinet edge.

Together, the three layers make for a bright space for cooking and cleaning, but each layer on its own or in combination creates an almost endless variety of moods.

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF TECH

While you might have switches (with dimmers, of course) for the room's main lighting—ceiling can lighting, an overhead semi-flush fixture, and pendants over the island—consider installing switches for specific zones, so you can light just one area of the room, Stumm suggests. Or use a motion detector so that as you walk to the coffee station, it lights up.

"One thing I love doing in kitchens is having the toe-kick lighting on an occupancy sensor," he says. "That way, they come on when you walk in. You don't have to turn on the lights or fully wake up when you go to the fridge in the middle of the night."

GETTING SMARTER

"With smart controls, your rooms can be like a theater, where every scene is lighted differently," says Terry McGowan, FIES, LC, director of engineering and technology for the American Lighting Association.

Set different lighting for stimulating activities like kitchen work or playing table tennis in the basement or for cozy evenings by the fire.

"Tell your lighting professional what you want in terms of control," McGowan says. "Just lighting? Security? Appliances? All of these can be looped together in a whole home system, if you want."

Style Savvy

WITH OUTDOOR LIGHTING, chandeliers, pendants, and sconces can fit the exterior of the house rather than what's happening inside. In other words, there's no need to match indoor decor.

"Everyone made a move to create outdoor spaces during the pandemic," says Pam Bailey of Currey & Company. "Now, we are stuck inside staring at screens all day, and we want to escape to those outdoor rooms. There are so many beautiful lighting options that serve an outdoor space."

SASSY WALL HANGERS

Outdoor sconces pack style and function in one attractive package.

Beside doors, they increase the safety factor. Lined up on a wall, sconces can create an outdoor focal point.

Choose a sconce that creates the visual effect you desire. Sconces can provide overall, upward, or downward light—or all three. Consider both practicality and design.

Top Spots

IN OUTDOOR SPACES, layer lighting for overall, task, and accent lighting as you would indoors.

PATHS: Consider downlights to prevent glare and add safety.

ENTRIES: Place lights overhead or on each side of a door at all entries.

STEPS: Light risers or treads.

DECKS OR PATIOS: Illuminate task areas, such as outdoor kitchens, as well as railings and seating areas.

ARCHITECTURAL FEATURES: Highlight an interesting element, such as a pergola or arbor. Create interesting highlights and shadows by washing or grazing a wall with light.

> —GREG MARTIN, creative director, Kichler

STAR POWER

About 19 states plus the District of Columbia have light pollution laws, aka Dark Sky legislation. While states and municipalities and even homeowners association rules may differ, all want to promote energy conservation, public safety, aesthetics, or astronomical research capabilities, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

The most common requirements: shielded fixtures that emit light only downward and use lower wattage bulbs. Some rules regulate the time certain lights can be used.

DESIGN ADVICE

For a cohesive look, the bulb may be as important as the fixture. "Don't settle for what was already in the box or in the fixture," says Eric Choi, senior director for Bulbrite. "Most consumers don't realize how critical a bulb can be to decor and how much it can affect design."

Easy and breezy

EXPERT ADVICE
Like many home products, ceiling fans often now include smart features. In addition to familiar remote controls, many fans are Wi-Fi enabled or compatible and controlled through an app. Check the product specifications for details. For some fans, the smart features are standard. For others, they are an option. In either case, an app can connect with the fan to change speeds, adjust integrated lights, or set up schedules for optimum energy efficiency.

Plug & Play

What if changing out a chandelier was literally as easy as plugging in a lamp? With a new product called SkyPlug, it is.

"THIS INVENTION has simplified hanging a fixture—even ceiling fans—into pressing a button to release and snapping a new one in place," says Terry McGowan, FIES, LC, American Lighting Association director of engineering and technology.

The SkyPlug includes a receptacle, which is wired to the electrical junction box (the same concept as a wall receptacle), and a plug that wires to the fixture. To install the fixture, simply insert the plug into the receptacle. When locked in place, the combo is weight-bearing.

"We believe it will change the future of hardwired lighting to safe, easy plug-and-play lighting and fans," says Rani Kohen, executive chairman for SKYX Platforms.

"SkyPlug is so much safer, easier, and more economical than the old way," says Rick Seidman, Quoizel president. "Today, homeowners change their lighting fixtures every seven to 10 years—and it's a pain in the neck. Now, you can easily swap out the fixture over your island for the holidays!"

Besides earning innovation awards, the product specifications have been approved by two national standards organizations.

SMART PLAYS

Besides easy installation, the smart version, SkyXPlug, is next level. With built-in smoke and carbon monoxide alarms, Bluetooth connectivity, and connections for Wi-Fi routers, the canopy is a hardworking element of smart-home integration. "When installing your home Wi-Fi, you need your router to not be blocked by furnishings," Quoizel's Rick Seidman says. "What is the best real estate? Middle of ceiling!" In addition, every canopy comes with an emergency light for power outages. "That's one of those little things you aren't even buying it for, but when you need it, you love it."

9-watt LED delivers 800 lumens. 43-watt halogen delivers 800 lumens. 60-watt incandescent bulb delivers 800 lumens.

A fixture that holds three 60-watt incandescent bulbs delivers 2,400 lumens (800 lumens for each 60-watt bulb × 3).

TRUTH IN LABELING

THE FEDERAL government requires a lighting-facts label on bulb products. If the product packaging describes the bulb as "daylight," that's a wide range. Look at the "light appearance" for a better idea of what you'll get. Remember that Kelvins (K) offer an idea on warmth of color and that lumens tell you brightness.

THE LANGUAGE OF LIGHT

You might like to read next to your favorite lamp, which has a lightbulb in it. But to lighting industry professionals, what you call a "bulb" is often referred to as a "lamp" (or vice versa). Here are a few terms to help you speak the same language.

WATT: The energy used to power a lightbulb.

LUMEN: A measure of light output, as opposed to the amount of power consumed (watts). The higher the lumens the brighter the light.

CHROMATICITY: Measured in Kelvins, it is the overall "tone" of the light that you see when you look at a lightbulb or fixture. Bulbs with higher Kelvin ratings, such as 4000K or 5000K, appear blue-white or "cool." For a "warm" light go for a bulb with 2700K to 3000K.

COLOR RENDERING INDEX (CRI): The zero to 100 scale tells you how natural and normal colors in a space look, including the appearance of people. Residential lighting should use LEDs that have a CRI rating of 90 or higher to make people and spaces look their best.

A Final Goodbye

PHASING OUT for 30 years, the light from incandescent lightbulbs is finally going out.

The incandescent bulb, created by Thomas Edison, basically produces light using heat and is highly inefficient.

Since the 1990s, the federal government has been raising energy standards, and the incandescent bulb has fallen short. In April 2022, the Department of Energy put in place two rules that require manufacturers to sell energy-efficient bulbs. They went into effect January 1, 2023, for manufacturers; retailers and distributors have an extra seven months to comply. The ruling effectively will end the sale of incandescent bulbs.

The DOE expects consumers to save $3 billion per year on utility bills.

Beyond Smart

Products as diverse as lightbulbs and refrigerators are available in “smart” versions that can be controlled as part of an interconnected home management system.

AN INTEGRATED HOME, where smart products work together and can be controlled by a single app is the next frontier. Melissa Andresko, chief corporate brand ambassador for Lutron, and Terry McGowan, FIES, LC, director of engineering and technology for ALA, offer integrated home insights.

Q What are the benefits of integration?

A MA: Smart home products offer an unprecedented level of convenience and, in many cases, peace of mind. An integrated home means you have these smart home products working together, and the result is increased benefits to the homeowner.

TM: One app will handle all the appliances—not just one lightbulb or fixture. System apps with voice controls make controlling devices simpler and easier. And utility companies are offering breaks on energy bills if you use these devices in utility-approved systems.

Q How does integration compare to what people are doing now?

A TM: Anything that has a smart component can be hooked up to a single system.

MA: We see a lot of families starting with things like voice assistants (Amazon Alexa, Apple Siri, and Google Assistant).

Q What integration systems are on the market now?

A TM: There are a half dozen out there. They all provide ways to connect smart products so that there’s a common control. Consumers love voice control, but tablets and cell phones can provide on-screen controls too. Front-runners like Lutron have their own approach.

MA: With Lutron's Caseta system, you can control lights from the three voice assistants and integrate with products like Ring doorbells and cameras, Sonos smart speakers, and more. Lutron also makes a smart window shades system.

Q How do consumers put a system in place?

A MA: Many smart-home products are marketed as do-it-yourself. But for more sophisticated home integration, look at professionals accredited by CEDIA (cedia.net), an association of certified home integration installers.

TUNING IN

THE ABILITY TO TUNE LIGHTS is no longer a new concept, but Joe Rey-Barreau, associate professor at the University of Kentucky College of Design, says color is only one element that can be tuned to suit your home and needs.
INTENSITY TUNING: Put a dimmer on the wall, plug in a lamp, and adjust your lighting to brighten or calm your mood.
COLOR TEMPERATURE TUNING: Use smart bulbs to adjust color from "cool" whites and blues to "warmer" hues.
STIMULUS TUNING: Bulbs can mimic the daylight spectrum and tune into the body's rhythms.

THE COVER KITCHEN started with golden light fixtures. Our mood board used the glamorous finish as the springboard for a fashion-forward kitchen. Stylish pendants infuse the icy white tile, range hood, cabinets, and countertops with warmth and glamour. Pops of green, subtle textures, and wood accents further the eye-catching effect. The best part? The timeless envelope allowed us to experiment with several styles of pendants. Compare this finalist with the cover fixture to see how a fixture can change the overall look.
